HOW ARE YOU DOING?

STRESS

1. In a typical day, how often do you take time to relax?
 Never
 Sometimes
 Always

2. Do you have someone to watch or assist at work who you can rely on during stressful moments?
 Yes, I need to deal with stress on my own.
 Yes, but I can't always rely on that help.
 Yes, I have a strong support network.

3. In a typical week, how often do you get at least 7 hours of sleep?
 I try to sleep at least six or seven hours a few nights.

STRESS BUSTERS QUICK TIPS

STRESS AND YOUR HEALTH

The long-term activation of the stress response system — and the subsequent overexposure to cortisol and other stress hormones — can disrupt almost all your body's processes. This puts you at increased risk of numerous health problems, including:

- Heart disease
- Digestive problems
- Depression
- Obesity
- Memory impairment
- Increased cold and flu incidence

Read on to learn about various ways to immediately deal with the mental and physical aspects of stress.

BREATHING TO REDUCE STRESS

Shallow breathing, which occurs when we are stressed, adds to the light or tight response and oxidative response. Deep breathing is a simple way to interrupt this cycle and calm down the body and mind.

Be mindful of your breathing in times of stress:

- Use your diaphragm muscles to draw in breath, feeling your belly, not your shoulders, move.
- Allow your exhale to extend until all breath has left your lungs.

RAINBOW VISUALIZATION FOR BETTER SLEEP

Close your eyes and follow the deep breathing technique:

- Let one breath equal each color (red, orange, yellow, green, blue, violet).
- As you reach each color, visualize an image of an object in that color.
- Keep this image in your mind until your next breath and color change.

Repeat this cycle until you drift off to sleep. If you find your mind wandering, consciously return to the image of the color.

FOUR KEYS TO RESILIENCE

We all face challenging situations that create a tremendous amount of stress or our mental and physical health. A resilient health care is consistently designed to return to the kind of a hard one, but the following are commonly used:

Resilience is the ability to withstand these stressors, and to adapt to them in ways that support healthy living.

- Knowledge — having the information and skills that support healthy living
- Experience — having had the experience and growing in positive, productive ways
- Support — identifying relationships, mentors, and overall outlook on life
- Practice — being mindful of our behavior, thoughts, and actions and operating positively, resilience building skills.

Coach's Quick Tip

"Being resilient doesn't mean going through the world's toughest stressors and coping. You cannot avoid and sometimes with a mix of other actions in response to life's challenges."

The real resilience lies in finding through the relationships to build your emotional and physical resilience, or to use as your personal support system.

ARE YOU RESILIENT?

Do you need to build your level of resilience? Answer "yes," "sometimes," or "no" to the following based on emotionally resilient people.

1. Do you know your boundaries (the separation between who you are in your own and the cause for your recovery behavior)?
 Yes Sometimes No
2. Are you self-aware of your physical and mental needs, and do you know when to reach out?
 Yes Sometimes No
3. Do you have a strong support network you can count on in times of need?
 Yes Sometimes No
4. Do you accept the things that you cannot change, and believe you can handle them after tragedy?
 Yes Sometimes No
5. Do you practice mindfulness, or being present in a moment without judgment or distraction?
 Yes Sometimes No
6. Do you accept that you do not have all the answers?
 Yes Sometimes No
7. Do you practice good self-care habits to support yourself when you need it most?
 Yes Sometimes No
8. Do you consider other possible interpretations of the events in your life? (i.e. Can this situation be looked at in a different way that hasn't been considered?)
 Yes Sometimes No

Your answers can help you to determine what you need to focus on to build your emotional and physical resilience.
